The Spectator Joseph Addison, Sir Richard Steele, 1945 The Spectator was a daily publication that had a fictional narrator Mr Spectator The first number is dedicated to his life story Mr Spectator speaks very little communicating mainly through facial gestures His unassuming profile enables him to circulate widely throughout society and fulfill his position as spectator He comments on the habits foibles and social faux pas of his fellow citizens He also notes the irony of his volubility in prose compared to his taciturnity in daily life The second number of The Spectator introduces the members of the Spectator Club Mr Spectator's close friends This device provides the authors with a cast of secondary characters to be drawn on in stories and examples of social conduct In order to foster an inclusive ethos the club members are drawn from many different walks of life The best known of these characters is Sir Roger de Coverley an English squire of Queen Anne's reign He exemplifies the values of an old country gentleman and is portrayed as lovable but somewhat ridiculous making his Tory politics seem harmless but silly Will Honeycomb is a rake who is very ready at that sort of discourse with which men usually entertain women No 2 He is reformed near the end of The Spectator when he marries Andrew Freeport is a merchant and the club also includes a general and a priest

Richard Steele, 2017-05-16 Excerpt from Sir Roger De Coverley and the Spectator's Club The question which is perplexing the anxious overburdened man of the nineteenth century Is life worth living might with some propriety have been asked in the eighteenth of the social dawdler whose days were rounds of sensual pleasures Thackeray says I have calculated the manner in which statesmen and persons of condition passed their time and what with drinking and dining and supping and cards wonder how they got through with their business at all The fine gentleman rose late and sauntered in the Mall the fashionable promenade which we are I told was always full of idlers but especially so morning and evening when their Majesties often walked with the royal family After his walk the society man dressed elaborately and in his periwig cocked hat skirt coat wired to make it stick out ruffled linen black silk hose square toed shoes and buckles gaily betook himself to the coffee house or chocolate house Here he lounged and over the steaming cup discussed the latest news from abroad from Parliament from society As there were few conveniences in the homes for entertaining it was the custom to dine with a friend or two at the tavern where hilarity prevailed and drunkenness was a trifling incident attaching no shame or disgrace to the offender Diner over the coffee house again or possibly the club occupied the attention and the theatre or gaming table finished the day for this man of quality who perhaps had no uneasy consciousness of time wasted About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of
